George's Snack Bar Now Open

Jerry and Rufina George look real happy in the photo above . . . and they have good reason for those friendly smiles.

Owners and operators of George's Snack Bar, they were hurried out a few weeks ago. The inside of their business was completely ruined and so was the equipment.

Within one day less than three weeks since the fire, the Snack Bar was completely re-built and re-decorated and opened for business Friday, February 16th. Jerry and Rufina had lots of help from family and friends in their efforts to get ready for the re-opening and for that they are very thankful.

The newly decorated Snack Bar has beautiful wall-to-wall carpet and pretty curtains at the windows . . . much prettier than before the fire, however. Jerry and Rufina invite you to stop by and see for yourself.

College Students Present Program For F

The Junior Chapter Future Homemakers of America met in the Appomattox Intermediate School auditorium on Thursday afternoon, February 15th, with Debbie Morrell, president of the chapter, presiding.

Susan Porton, Chairman of the Program Committee, introduced five students from Longwood College who presented a program on "Decisions That Count". The students, all Juniors majoring in Home Economics, were Bonnie Soulis, Sue Mansfield, Kathy Wood, Sandy Harris and Linda Wilson.

"Decisions That Count" was presented in play-form and dealth with some of the pressures that can and do face students of today, the decisions ranged from smoking, parttime work, tennis instead of studying, skipping classes to go for a swim, going steady, and the temptation to look at test questions prior to the test to be taken. Students of today face these and many other pressures daily and the five-girl panel advised that you should make your decision - don't put it off. Friends can really put pressure on a fellow student . . . but it is up to the individual to make decisions.

A slide presentation following the skit showed what it really means to "grow" in the right way.

Members of the Junior Chapter FHA presented gifts to each of the five girls as a token of their appreciation for the program.

A brief business session followed the program.

the Southeast and Southwest U. S., and we need to anticipate a 30% gain in beef cow population in the next 10 years.

Today there are 170,000 feedlots in the country, but 160 of these produce 27% of the beef. The prediction is that in 10 years 200 feedlots will provide 80% of the finished beef.

This expansion is going to be necessary if we are to produce 29 billion pounds of beef which is the goal for providing 127 pounds of beef per capita.

Beef cow owners will need to give preference to animals with records. A representative of the Polled Hereford Association pointed out that in 1972 cattle with records averaged $300 more per head than those without records.

BCIA programs got a real boost when it was strongly pointed out that predictable performance is in demand, and everybody producing cattle should be involved in BCIA.

One speaker told about their work with computers; having cattle herds in 15 states and breeding 2000 to 4000 cows a year. All performance data was on computer. They are now able to predict the rate of growth, muscular quality, and the measurable qualities of an animal even before conception.

What are efficient cattle? Cattle that grow fast – efficient users of feed – will reproduce and hang up a good carcass.

Another speaker put the need for performance data this way.

An Iowa farmer knows how many bushels of corn he harvests per acre. A Kansas farmer knows how many bushels of wheat were produced per acre. Ask a cattleman how many pounds of cattle he produced and he doesn't even know whether all cows calved.

We have the tools, but it's up to the cattleman to use them.
